THE DATA

50.1%

Renters Over the 30% Rent Threshold (2024)

Wilmington is the top-ranked metro in North Carolina for renters spending more than 30% of income on rent.

This figure—50.1% of renters—means that over half of Wilmington's rental households are classified as cost-burdened, a threshold that signals severe affordability strain. The data comes from the U.S. Census Bureau's American Community Survey 5-Year Estimates, 2024, and reflects a sustained pressure point in the local housing market.

01

Affordability crisis fuels demand for workforce housing

Wilmington’s high rent burden is not a sign of weakness but a structural signal: the city is attracting a growing workforce that cannot afford market-rate rentals. This imbalance is driving demand for subsidized, mixed-income, and workforce housing models. The pressure is especially acute in neighborhoods with high job concentration, such as the Port City and downtown corridors, where wages have not kept pace with housing costs.

Cultural vibrancy as a counterweight to economic strain

Despite the burden, Wilmington's cultural infrastructure—evidenced by the Cucalorus Film Festival and youth arts programs—is expanding. These initiatives reflect a community investing in identity and cohesion, even as financial pressure mounts. This suggests that long-term value is being built not just in real estate, but in social capital, which may insulate the city from outright decline and attract resilient, mission-driven residents and investors.
