THE DATA

$37,797,975

CDBG-DR Funding Awarded

This first-round allocation supports commercial revitalization in western North Carolina counties impacted by Hurricane Helene.

The full $37.8 million in federal Community Development Block Grant Disaster Recovery (CDBG-DR) funds was awarded to six projects across western NC counties — including Buncombe, Haywood, and Madison — all outside the Charlotte metro. No projects in Mecklenburg or Iredell counties were selected for this round.

01

Charlotte’s Absence Speaks Volumes

Charlotte’s exclusion from the first round of CDBG-DR commercial revitalization funding reveals a structural gap in disaster recovery alignment. While western NC counties received targeted support for post-Helene downtown renewal, Charlotte’s commercial corridors — despite their economic scale — did not meet the federal criteria for ‘most impacted’ designation in this round. This is not a lack of need, but a misalignment in eligibility, possibly due to broader infrastructure resilience or lower damage severity in city centers.

02

The Real Recovery Divide

This funding gap underscores a deeper trend: Charlotte's commercial recovery is less dependent on federal disaster aid and more driven by private capital and market momentum. While western NC towns rely on federal intervention to stabilize their core districts, Charlotte's business districts are already in a cycle of self-sustaining reinvestment — a sign of long-term resilience. But this also means Charlotte is less visible in federal recovery narratives, potentially limiting future access to targeted grants.
