2.5

One-Year Change in Teacher Turnover Rate, in Points (2025)

Liberty Hill ISD recorded the highest increase in teacher turnover among Williamson County districts in the 2024–25 school year.

This 2.5-point spike is not a sign of instability, but a signal of intense growth pressure. High turnover in a fast-expanding district often reflects a surge in new hires to meet rising student enrollment, not teacher dissatisfaction. It indicates that Liberty Hill is not just growing — it's actively recruiting to keep pace with demographic expansion.

01

Turnover as a Growth Signal

This insight flips the conventional narrative: high turnover is not a red flag, but a proxy for economic momentum. When districts like Liberty Hill are hiring aggressively, it signals that housing markets are being pulled forward by demographic forces, not just financial incentives.

02

The Hidden Infrastructure Delay

This delay in permanent settlement creates a hidden bottleneck in the housing market. While demand is strong, supply responsiveness is constrained by the fact that new residents are still in a transitional phase, making it harder to predict peak home demand and leading to underestimation of long-term housing pressure.
