THE DATA

3.2

Average Household Size (2024)

Liberty Hill leads Williamson County in household size, reflecting a growing family-centric development pattern.

This figure — the highest in Williamson County — indicates a shift toward multi-generational living and larger family units in Liberty Hill, distinct from the more transient or single-person households in neighboring cities like Hutto and Taylor. The trend suggests strong demand for larger homes and family-oriented amenities, which may influence future zoning and infrastructure planning.

01

Family Growth Drives Housing Demand

This trend may also indicate a long-term shift in land use — with more acreage being set aside for larger lot sizes, private driveways, and community green spaces — all of which align with the Texas A&M TRERC's 2026 Q3 findings on suburbanization patterns in non-Georgetown Williamson County.

02

Size Isn't Just Space — It's Stability

In contrast, cities like Taylor (2.5) and Brushy Creek (2.8) may be experiencing higher turnover, possibly due to younger, single-occupant residents or rental-heavy models. The data implies that Liberty Hill's real estate market is better positioned for long-term appreciation, as stability reduces risk and increases buyer confidence.
