85

Net Households Gained From a Single County (2023)

Boulder County gained 85 more households from Travis County, TX than it lost in the 2022–23 period.

This figure represents the net inflow of households from a single county, with Travis County, TX topping the list. The data reflects a sustained migration trend from Austin’s metropolitan core into Boulder County, driven by lifestyle preferences, remote work adoption, and climate-conscious relocation. The magnitude of this inflow suggests strong pull factors beyond mere proximity.

01

Austin's exodus is fueling Boulder's growth

This trend reinforces Boulder's position as a magnet for knowledge workers, especially those in tech, clean energy, and remote-first industries. The inflow from Texas's most dynamic metro suggests that Boulder is becoming a preferred alternative to hyper-competitive coastal and Sun Belt hubs.

02

Boulder's pull is structural, not seasonal

This structural migration may be reshaping Boulder's long-term housing demand, influencing development priorities, and increasing pressure on infrastructure and land use policies. The market is not just growing—it is being redefined by the values and preferences of new residents who are choosing Boulder for its distinct identity.
