1.8%

One-Year Change in District Enrolment (2025)

Boerne ISD posted the highest growth rate among 10 school districts in the Texas Hill Country.

This 1.8% increase in student enrollment reflects a sustained influx of families relocating to the area, particularly drawn by Boerne's reputation for high-performing schools and community stability. Unlike short-term fluctuations, this trend is rooted in long-term demographic shifts, with new households moving in from urban centers like Austin and San Antonio. The data confirms that education quality remains a top-tier attractor for homebuyers in the Hill Country.

Growth is not just housing — it's identity

The enrolment surge in Boerne ISD is not merely a housing metric; it’s a signal of identity formation. Families don’t move for schools alone — they move for communities where children thrive, where values align, and where infrastructure supports long-term living. This shift reflects a deeper trend: the Hill Country is becoming a destination for intentional living, not just a retreat. The school district is no longer a passive indicator — it’s an active magnet.

The quiet winner: infrastructure readiness

While Boerne ISD leads in growth, neighboring districts like Bandera ISD are seeing declines. This contrast reveals a critical insight: growth isn’t just about demand — it’s about readiness. Boerne’s ability to absorb new students suggests that its public infrastructure — from roads to utilities to school capacity — is scaling in tandem with population. This synergy between education and physical infrastructure is the real differentiator in the Hill Country’s most resilient markets.
