30.8%

Teacher Turnover Rate by District (2025)

Jarrell ISD reports the highest teacher turnover rate among all Williamson County school districts for the 2024–2025 school year.

This figure reflects a systemic challenge in retaining educators, potentially signaling deeper workforce instability in one of the fastest-growing areas of the Austin metro. With rapid population influx and rising construction, the strain on public services—including education—is becoming a key factor in long-term livability.

Turnover as a signal of strain

In Round Rock, Leander, and Cedar Park, where new home construction continues at pace, this turnover data suggests that even high-growth areas face hidden bottlenecks in social infrastructure. The market may be overheating in housing but cooling in long-term sustainability.

The cost of growth without capacity

This mismatch is not unique to education. It mirrors the broader challenge in Williamson County's economy: rapid development without proportional investment in public goods. For investors and homebuyers, this suggests a future where high demand coexists with rising risk of service degradation, especially in districts that are not yet mature.
